

Dying to Talk Project

People with learning disabilities are often not spoken to about

- end of life care
- dying
- making choices about death

The Dying to Talk project will help people that MacIntyre supports talk about death

It will also help staff talk to people they support about death

We will work with people with a learning disability and support workers and family members by

- giving workshops
- giving information
- giving out things that can help

We will

- Help people not to feel scared to hear about death

- Help people feel not scared to talk about death

- Help people understand more about death and dying

- Help people have choice about death and dying

- Help family members of people with a learning disability to feel ok about talking about death and dying

- Help Family members make choices if their loved ones become unwell

- Help MacIntyre staff feel ok about talking to people they support about death and dying

- Make sure professionals that work with MacIntyre are good at talking about death and dying

- Give people good ideas about how to talk about death and dying

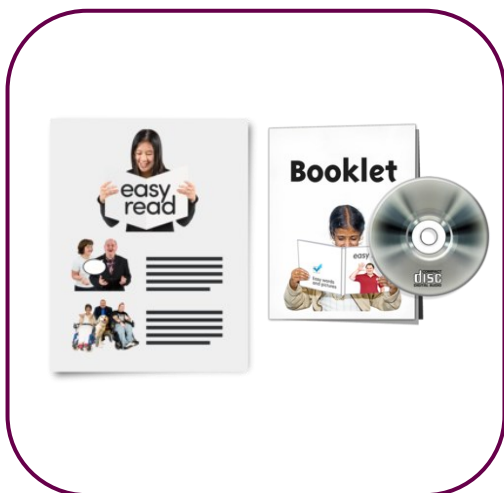

- Help people plan for the future

- Make things that will help people talk about death and dying
